The Interview That Changed Everything

Every morning, Clara wakes up at 6:00 a.m. and starts her day with a strong cup of coffee and a glance at the headlines. She has always dreamed of becoming a journalist, and now, after five years of freelancing, she finally has an interview at the most prestigious newspaper in the country.

She is nervous, of course — who wouldn't be? The editor-in-chief, a stern woman known for her brutal honesty, rarely gives second chances. But Clara has prepared thoroughly. She has studied past editions, memorized key figures, and even rehearsed answers in front of the mirror.

As she enters the building, everything feels surreal. The marble floors shine, the receptionist smiles politely, and the air smells faintly of printer ink and ambition. Clara waits patiently in the lobby, her portfolio clutched tightly in her hands.

Suddenly, she is called in.

The interview lasts almost an hour. They discuss ethics, deadlines, crisis coverage, and storytelling techniques. Clara shares her experiences, including how she once interviewed a whistleblower under heavy police surveillance.

When it's over, the editor nods thoughtfully and says, "We'll be in touch."

Later that night, Clara lies awake, replaying the conversation in her head. She doesn't know if she'll get the job — but for the first time in a long time, she feels like she belongs.

- Who is Clara and what is her main goal in the story?

- What kind of work has Clara done before the interview?
- How is the editor-in-chief described?
- Did you relate to Clara at any point in the story? Why or why not?
- Do you think Clara did enough to prepare for the interview?
- What would you have done differently if you were in Clara's place?
- Do you think the editor was fair? Why?
- What is the main message or theme of the story?
- What emotions does the story communicate?
- Do you think the ending is hopeful? Explain your answer.
- How would the story feel different if it were written entirely in past tense?
- Describe your dream job and how you would prepare to get it.
